Kiely's songwriting is often restless, shifting between cosmic and dreamy shapes while incorporating hints of jazz, indie Americana, and light Laurel Canyon tones.

— UNDER THE RADAR

One of those sublime and unassuming efforts that sneaks up on you until you find it won't let go.

— NO DEPRESSION

Sean Kiely is a singer, songwriter, and guitarist from Jersey City, NJ. His music starts in folk and ends up somewhere harder to name: acoustic at its core, but restless enough to pull in americana, jazz, and whatever else the song asks for. His lyrics are patient and precise, chasing ordinary moments to conclusions that feel both surprising and inevitable. An "alt-folksonger", present for the cosmic joke.

The new 9 song album Long Live The Low (Multiple Logo) finds Kiely backed up by an impressive group of collaborating musicians: expansive, genre-defying creative voices including Bobby Hawk (Phoebe Bridgers, Bleachers), Chris Morrissey (Norah Jones, Margaret Glaspy), Bill Campbell (Andrew Bird, Kurt Rosenwinkel), and Juno Award winning Canadian singer-songwriter and banjoist Kaia Kater. The title track "Long Live The Low" announces the album on 9/1/26. It's an anthem to the modest, the quiet, and the "real under the biggest lie you ever told."

Whether it's a quiet solo set or the fuller, more textured arrangements on his records, Sean Kiely keeps writing toward the next moment, where a song turns a corner and pulls you along with it. Long Live The Low is out everywhere on vinyl & streaming 10/16/26.
